

HIGHlight

April 2008

From the President...

Dear PSNM Friends —

Our windy season has arrived, which means spring and the wonderful renewal of the earth. Hopefully allergies won't spoil our enjoyment of it. At our March meeting, Stephanie Birdsall enticed us to get out and paint and she showed us how to do it with very few pastels. How many of us have given it a try?

The tenth anniversary MasterWorks Exhibition is about to open. The reception will be Friday, April 4th from 5-8 pm. You won't want to miss this exciting event. I've heard a description of the color scheme and the decorating plans. It will be quite an evening.

Carol Lovelady was wearing one of the new MasterWorks t-shirts at the March meeting. If you would like to order one, contact Carol at 345-2267 or email her at lovelady101@comcast.net.

Another new clothing item that you can order is a painting apron with an embroidered PSNM logo. Contact Gaye Garrison if you'd like to have one of these. Gaye's phone number is 869-6979 or email her at dangaye@msn.com

Someone is still needed to be the Refreshments Committee chairperson. The responsibilities include coordinating refreshments for each monthly meeting, securing volunteers to bring finger-foods and drinks, plus reminding people bringing refreshments a few days prior to the meeting. Please call me at 323-1617 if you can do this. Even if you sign up for 6 months at a time it would be helpful.

See you at the April meeting.

Miniature Tips and Tricks

Paul Murray, multiple "Best of Show" winner in MasterWorks Miniatures division, will demonstrate his "Miniature" techniques. He'll show how he uses "indirect" marks to make intricate shapes and texture to create detail. Many of these "cheap tricks" are applicable to larger pastel paintings as well.

Paul's painting, Memory Lane (right) was shown in the April 2008 issue of SouthwestArt magazine alongside the announcement for MasterWorks.

March Program Review

by Gail Murray

Stephanie Birdsall: A Pocketful of Pastels

Currently from Tucson, AZ, veteran plein air artist, Stephanie Birdsall showed us the true art of packing light when painting plein air, as well as demonstrating how a luscious landscape can be translated in just 12 sticks of pastel. She always paints from life and loves to paint en plein air on her many travels, and shared many tips for minimizing painting gear. For transporting her supplies when back packing, she loves the Open Box M travel box and the Heilman travel easel, which both fit onto a tripod. She prefers 1/2 sticks of Holbein pastels and Great American for all her plein air needs. She mounts her paper on Fomecor or Gatorboard and uses wax paper to make protective sleeves for finished pieces. When in the field, Stephanie wears a very small, lightweight apron with pockets, which folds down to nothing, and uses either water or alcohol for blending underpaintings. A 4 oz. bottle of Gamsol is also handy, and can usually be packed to take on a plane. To save more space, she cuts down a small brush. Because open stock Holbein pastels come in small plastic boxes, she can easily stash 6 or 8 colors in each of her jeans pockets and not worry about carrying much more to paint with. If you know where you are going to paint, only take the colors you will need for that scene. When she paints in oil, she only uses 4 basic oil colors. An example of the limited pastel palette she travels with would be values in 3 darks, 3 medium, 3 light and 3 colors. The colors are usually greens, blues, and earth tones since she is painting landscapes. She doesn't bring any pure primaries, like red, yellow, or blue. She always has a hat and tries to keep the paper and palette in the shade. Umbrellas do not last with Stephanie. She has used the silver vented plein air umbrella and the wind still blows it over. She rarely uses photos to paint from. She likes the experience of that moment; photos distort what she thinks she has seen. The largest she paints plein air is 12x16, but she does larger studio still lifes. The half sticks make her work smaller, and she usually packs the 11x14 Pastelbord, which is easier to carry, all of which reduces the need to carry around a lot of "stuff."

Stephanie first worked in oils years ago, but being a single mom found it was easier to paint with pastels, and easier to put them away, when kids are around. She picked up a box of old Rembrandts from college back then, and only three years ago started painting in oils again.

For the demo she used Ampersand's Pastelbord, but she also mounts Kitty Wallis paper on board. The scene she painted was a tree on a shady lane. Since she wasn't on location she used a reference photo for the demo, and used all Holbein pastels, which seem to never wear out. They are harder for a good base and they stick real well. She can layer really light or put them on solidly. They are harder than Rembrandts, but not as hard as Nu Pastel. They don't smudge when she has them in her pocket in the protective plastic tubes. First she blocked in her scene in charcoal to lay in the basic composition and layers over it with brown or purple to make a darker shade of that color. She works dark to light on location to get the shadows down, so she isn't chasing the light. She gets a sense of the scene she wants to paint and knows where she wants to go with the painting. When looking at her 12 colors, she tries to find the pulsating dark underneath which will be a complement to the others in the image. Color temperature is all relative to the colors next to them. A warm or cool color will not be the same in a different context, so don't get too hung up on color temperature. She blocked in the darks first on a piece of tan toned board then did an alcohol wash. As she proceeds through the painting, she squints at the photo and the painting to reduce the extra details to just values and shapes. She also squints and walks back and forth from the painting. She likes the alcohol wash because it dries quickly and helps her establish the underground quickly with shape to anchor the painting.

During the demo, she keeps layering lightly at the beginning with just a couple of colors. It is amazing how many colors you can layer. Holbeins are good for blending too. Nu Pastels are not color fast and will fade over time. She loves working on the Pastelbord, which is very durable and forgiving. You can wash it or drop it, and it begs for more! Her favorite subjects to paint are mountains and scenes with water falls in them. Ironically, the desert is the hardest subject for her to paint. She also likes painting flowers and still lifes. Other favorite subject matter includes roosters and chickens, which she says all have personalities and remind her of people. She does studies of chickens in the coop and works from photos of chickens. Nearly everything she paints has a living or organic subject in the scene. She is not afraid to move things around in a scene's composition; what works in nature may not work in your painting. You have the total power over your painting.

When asked about her experience in marketing her oils vs. pastels, she said framing is more important with pastels than any other medium. She advises always using A/R or Conservation Clear glass to reduce glare. She is in a Connecticut gallery that said they don't sell pastels. She brought them a pastel of an onion still life and it sold in an hour and a half. Two of her paintings were in the "Nomadas del Arte" juried plein air exhibit at Sage Creek Gallery in Santa Fe, March 1-31, 2008. 200 artists exhibited plein air paintings done on location across 6 states during 2007. The show can also be see online at www.sagecreekgallery.com blues. It's always a good idea to step back from the easel during this process to see where you are, so you don't get lost in the painting. A good painting is a combination of uneven contrasts: more dark, less light; more detail, less detail. Once all the values are in, take a small cheap brush set aside specifically for this step, and carefully paint over each blocked in value with Turpenoid, rinsing and wiping your brush often. Start with your lightest values (yellows) first, and carefully cover them so as not to bleed any adjacent blue values into your yellows, thus creating the unintended consequence of green! Then proceed to the middle values of sunlight, and so on, until the entire underpainting has been "turped." She is careful about the direction of brush strokes on the "turp" step. Sometimes she will let some of the underpainting show through the final painting, and depending on the image, some drips or runs can be "happy accidents". Note: If you travel abroad to paint, Turpenoid is not always available in remote foreign locations, so you may have to improvise this step with water or alcohol. Be advised, that water or alcohol will leave the pastel pasty on the surface. Turpenoid melts the pastel into the paper. If your "turped" underpainting is not drying fast enough to suit you, the essential studio tool, a hair dryer, can be used to speed things up a bit. Because of the time it takes to do this process, it is not really useful in plein air and is best done as a studio exercise. Power for the hair dryer is probably more available too.

The order in which she proceeds: 1. sky color and value; 2. distance; 3. all the shadows; 4. paints darks to light. When painting en plein air, grab the color, value and general shape of the scene you are painting first. Once you have these established, you can successfully complete your painting in the studio. Maggie considers her plein air paintings as color studies for studio work.

She organizes her pastel sticks using the 6 value warm-to-cool method. When she picks up a pastel she thinks, warm or cool? Dark or light? She organizes them the same way so that when she paints she automatically knows where the colors are she wants to apply. She has developed a light touch when layering and has very few hard pastels but uses them for blending. Giraults are good to blend with and add color at the same time. They are good with foliage and moving water. Another blending technique is to quickly tap your fingers over the top of colors to pound them in together to blend. She cautions against "sideways tapping" which is just smearing. This tapping will marry the edges together, where your values (yellows and blues) meet, and create a "half tone" effect.

On distant peaks, she will bring in some of the sky color into the top of the peaks, as they appear to fade into the distance, creating atmospheric perspective. Sometimes this "tap tap tap" will reveal flecks of blue from the underpainting.

We all learned a lot from this quick one hour demo. There are six pages in her book devoted to this technique, and her next book, Painting the Effects of Sunlight and Shadow, will expand this topic even further. She is also writing an article for the March 2009 PJ, to celebrate its 10 years. Exciting Opportunity! Wouldn't you like to be the pastel artist who is the sole winner in an international competition that happens only once every two years? And what a prize — a $100 award, two points toward your IAPS Master Circle status, your winning painting published on the 2009 IAPS Convention Catalog and included in other international convention publicity, plus the distinction of having your original painting on display at the Convention in Albuquerque, NM from May 28 – 31, 2009, in view of hundreds of convention-goers, pastel product people, and renown pastel artists. Prospectus will be available soon from your IAPS Representative or Society President, and on the IAPS website at: www.pastelinternational.com
