January 2008

From the President...

Dear PSNM Friends —

The canvas of 2008 is blank and I'm wondering what marks we'll make. I have a few ideas and I'm excited about the year ahead. I'd like to thank those who served as officers and members of the board last year. They did a wonderful job and have passed the baton with things in fine order.

Can you imagine a year without the National Show? I'm sure none of us want to see that happen. We need a National Show Chairperson. Who will step up and say "I can do that." It will more likely happen if they see others signing on to handle the various committees. After all, "many hands make light work." I'd like for that to be my theme for the year.

Let's resurrect the electric yellow clipboard used during Paul Murray's presidency. Plan to come to the January meeting and sign up to help PSNM in 2008 in whatever capacity you can.

In conclusion, when I moved to Albuquerque in 1997, besides my church family, PSNM was the first group I joined. It's been a source of encouragement and inspiration to me and I'm pleased for your support in electing me your President for 2008.

— Elaine Koehler

November Program Review

by Gail Murray

Plein air field studies bring life to your art...

Gary Sanchez brought us his ideas and techniques for painting his favorite subjects, churches of New Mexico and thoughts on plein air. He rarely does a plein air pastel on site because of wind and weather issues, but will do plein air sketches with a 6B pencil. When he is outside, he will capture composition, value and color notes with his sketches. He prefers to finish paintings in the studio, working from these field sketches and notes. Gary says that keeping and using a sketch book is a lost art, and you should carry a sketch book with you all the time to record thoughts, impressions, and build memories. You never know when an idle moment will contribute to your next award winning painting.

He recommends two books which he considers Bibles for landscape painting, Edgar Payne's "Composition of Outdoor Painting," and "Carlson's Guide to Landscape Painting" by John F. Carlson. Another good book is Richard Schmidt's "A La Prima".

Gary makes pencil sketches everyday, for at least 30 minutes. He codes his black and white drawings with color or value codes. His favorite paper is Sennelier's Le Carte, in a sienna color. The Munsell analogous color theory wheel by Hal Reed is his favorite tool for colors, which Harley Brown also uses. This tool is available through Art is Therapy; PO Box 941, Woodland Hills, CA 91365. Phone: 818-884-6278.

When teaching children, Gary uses oil pastels. When painting in oils, he likes to keep a limited palette of red, yellow, blue and white.

The demo was a scene of Taos mountains from a study he did in May. He did two sketches, on site: first a color sketch in 25 minutes and a b/w sketch in 7 minutes. He kept the scene very simple – a mountain reflecting in a body of water. The demo began as he sketched the shape of the mountain and reflection using soft vine charcoal on his favorite sienna La Carte paper. He put in the horizon line about 1/3 of the way up from the bottom. Blue green was the dominant color on the demo. There are four key values in the painting. The sky is the lightest, followed by the ground, the plane with the slopes of the mountain, and the darkest being the "upright planes" (trees). He used a Sennelier dark pastel to block in the sky and shadows first. His paper was taped to a board on all four sides, with a small scrap taped next to the paper to use as a test patch. The sienna paper is a middle value.

Gary uses a small "isolator" to view his painting's values. This is a simple gadget he made from a small piece of mat board, about 1" tall by 3" wide, and divided into three equal sections. A small 1/4" diameter hole is punched in the middle of each section. One section is left white; the middle section is medium gray; last section is painted black. He will peer through the holes in the "isolator" to see if his values are right. This will help compare three areas at the same time. To simplify your shapes, you can squint when looking at a scene or location. Also, if the color disappears when you squint your eyes at your painting, the middle tone value is there. When judging the values of your colors, don't be afraid to use grays to adjust values. You have to have grays to make the other colors "pop." He uses a variety of pastels, and currently likes Mount Vision and had to go to old art stores to find Grumbachers, which are hard to find these days. Keep tight to your subject matter and values. When you resolve one area, go to another area and move around the painting. Don't stay on one area too long.

Gary studied under Daniel Greene, who never used his fingers to blend. He would use another pastel stick. Hard pastels don't work well on this surface, but they make a great blending tool. Gary also studied with Bob Rohm, who has good videos and is a good teacher, as is Alan Flattman. Gary advises studying the paintings of John Singer Sargeant, who has tight value areas. As Gary works his basic value study, he views the painting through a red filter to block them down to basic blacks, whites and grays. He likes to use vine charcoal because it can be used to darken areas if you don't have a dark enough pastel, and it grays things too. It also disappears really well, which makes it good to block in your sketch. He advises keeping true to your values and staying in your value range. Monet painted the same scene at different times of the day and different times of the year, showing how the values were different at each time of the day or year. For example, the sky will always appear to be a different color.

Gary used to do portraits for a long time, then began his NM church series and landscapes, but now seems to be moving toward more figurative work.

As he proceeded through the demo, the predominant color was blue-green. He likes the NuPastel #285 blue-green and Unison blue-green for his landscapes. He always admired the Taos Society of Artists for how they painted the NM skies. Working on the sky and clouds in the demo, he used some pinks to transition. Be sure to make some color harmony between the sky and landscape by using the same colors in both. If you put a little pink in the sky, find a place to repeat that color elsewhere in the painting. He is not afraid to use different pastels to find the ones he likes best. If he worked on marble dust board, he would be using softer pastels. Gary works on all parts of the painting and develops the whole piece at once. When blending and putting darks over lights, be careful not to create mud! When he is on location he paints more realistically; when in the studio more impressionistic and expressionistic and with a light touch. When he was younger, he painted tighter, but now is looser. When he paints, he always has a roll of paper towels under his arm to wipe his hands. He uses “Gloves in a Bottle” and a mask when painting at home. He uses “Kleenex” or a kneaded eraser to remove pastel from his paper, which can’t get wet unlike Kitty Wallis paper. Unison pastels work well on the La Carte paper.

Some more thoughts on color: Wilson Hurley uses a mars black to grey his colors down. Always think about color harmony as you are working and relating.

For further info or to contact Gary, he can be reached at 505-332-0649.

December Program Review

by Gail Murray

“Chiaroscuro for Dummies”

The December program by Chicago native Vasili “Bill” Katakis sent me to my vintage 1966 dictionary for the correct spelling and definition of his topic: Chiaroscuro. The word's roots are Italian, chiaro, meaning clear, and Latin, oscuro, meaning dim or obscure. Put the two together and you have what the dictionary calls the “distribution of light and shade in a picture or an artist's treatment of light and shade.” Bill brings to painting his career in lighting for cinematography; therefore he has a good grasp of lighting a subject to achieve the desired chiaroscuro effects in his art. Having just won the “People's Choice” award in the 2007 PSNM National Pastel Show for his painting, “Persephone” (seen below), Bill walks the talk of chiaroscuro.

Bill demonstrated basic kinds of lighting, by moving the lamp above, below and closer or further from the object. Top lighting is called “rim light”; the subjects can also be lit from the side, and under lit, or with ambient, reflective light. The demo was done using 3/4 top lighting. Like Gary Sanchez (November's presenter) Bill prefers to work on Sennelier's La Carte paper as well, favoring the middle value papers. He prefers the warm, cool, or dark grays to begin his paintings. By starting with a good middle value paper, saves time in developing mid values. From there he can go straight to either the darker or lighter values. Mr. Sennelier ground pastels for Degas, whose last great paintings were pastels. Bill sketched in the shapes of his subject with vine charcoal, and likes to work with Rembrandt, Sennelier, or Grumbacher pastels.

He started this study of the still life shapes with a basic sketch in blue pastel, then he quickly blocked in the background and underpainting of color and shapes. His light source is keyed in from the right side on the background. A Renaissance technique focuses on the shadow side of the subject. Hold a white bright panel to highlight, or a dark panel by the subject to make it appear darker. The Italians mastered this concept of chiaroscuro in the 1600-1700's. On one of the finished paintings of a calla lily he brought, Bill pointed out where he built in light accents on the petals of the flower that didn't exist in "real life." He says, "we are artists; we can do this!". And as does Gary Sanchez, Bill will also squint at his work to help manipulate the highlights. Bill referred to the "specular highlights" on the sphere, as the "ding", the brightest spot from a specular light source. Specular highlights should all appear in the same plane on all the objects lit from the same source. As he kept painting, he worked on the edges, shadows, and general shapes of the geometric wooden objects, defining their shadows and highlight details, paying careful attention to the location of one color adjacent to another. He never uses 100% black, but will touch it in at the end, on top of highlights. To add white to a color is to make a "tint". He likes to use the "color shapers" available at art stores, in foam or hard or medium soft rubber. As he proceeds with the painting, he says the background you put in defines the shape of the shadow. He does a lot of finger blending and layering, especially his whites. La Carte paper will take anything you can give it, except getting wet. Don't paint in the rain on La Carte. A self-described "blending maniac", his art professors told him not to blend. Now that they are not here, he blends anyway! He doesn't have any specific book he recommends on the topic, pointing to his head and saying, "it's all up here". At this point the hecklers in the audience suggested "Chiaroscuro for Dummies". It is easy to read and has a pronunciation key! Somebody wondered if it had any pictures? In all seriousness, somebody suggested a book by David Hockney, "The Secret Teaching of Painting."

Bill advises to play around and experiment with different kinds of light, either natural or artificial to find what balance works for you or your style and subject. In addition to blending and shaping the pastel pigment on your paper, you can also shape the shadows of your subject with cast shadows by putting a piece of warm, reflective material behind the object. There are two magic hours of the day for artists: sunrise with a crisp low light, and a warm sunset. Both times of day will provide some wonderful natural lighting in the effects of chiaroscuro.

To further discuss this topic with Bill, he may be reached at his e-mail address: katprod@aol.com
