From the President...

The most beautiful thing we can experience is the mysterious. It is the source of all true art and science.
—Albert Einstein

Greetings, PSNM Friends —

From time to time—like many others, I imagine—I begin to feel burned out on making art. I come to the end of a series and have no idea what I will do next. I visit museums and galleries, page through art magazines, revisit my old art history texts, and all that happens is that I become quite sure I'll never again paint anything that pleases me. A few nights ago I had a dream. I was in an art gallery, and I was awed by the paintings I saw there: beautiful abstracted landscapes in gorgeous colors. "I wish those were mine," I thought. Sometime the next day, I recalled the dream and the thought I'd had, and suddenly I realized—they are mine! They were born in my head! Whether what I produce as a result of this inspiration will be art or not is yet to be seen. But it was a timely reminder that the drive to create lives in us, even at those times when its direction is unclear, and perhaps all we need is to wait quietly while the mysterious process unfolds.

Monthly Meeting at the Albuquerque Museum

Saturday, September 9, 10am

Jane Maclean, a PSNM Signature Member, will share an overview of the process of involving the community in the production of public art for permanent display. She will show how she planned her project to connect people to each other and to the art itself. Legal issues such as the proposal, the contract process, and copyright concerns will be covered. Methods of organizing research material, developing a working time line, and arranging the studio will be presented. This will be done against a background of the three developing pastel paintings that were ultimately placed in hand-carved frames and hung in the Sandoval County Judicial Complex at Highway 528 and Idalia Road, January 2006. Jane's presentation will feature digital slides, and offer open discussion.

NOTE: Please plan to join Paul Murray and National Show Committee Chairs at Las Manañitas immediately after the regular meeting.

Saturday, October 13, 10am

Colleen Howe, is scheduled to be our presenter for the October meeting.

July Program Review by Gail Murray

Terry Ludwig Paints a Portrait

At the July meeting, artist, instructor, and pastel maker, Terry Ludwig, presented his demo by painting a portrait of PSNM member Wanda Portee. Wanda, with her dark, chin-length hair and striking orange top, was a vibrant image for us to watch as Terry captured her likeness on Kitty Wallis paper. He used “Belgian Mist” paper, which is mid-toned and said is not as intimidating as white. It allows you to paint darker or lighter. Terry also paints on Canson paper, but Wallis paper is much faster, more versatile and speeds things up. It also holds the pigment better than Canson. One of the first tips he shared, was to take a two-inch wide piece of masking tape to make a tray and run it along the bottom edge of the easel, sticky side up, below the painting to catch pastel dust. After the painting session is complete, just wad up the tape and discard. His favorite blending tool is a small chunk of foam tube pipe insulation, available in six foot lengths from Home Depot for about $1.50. He cuts it in to small chunks of various sizes, and blends away.

Before starting his demo, Terry drew lines with soft pastel onto his own face, from the middle of his forehead to his chin, and left and right of each eye. This was to illustrate the point of seeking the balance of features and center of interest of the face. In portraits, the focal points are the mouth and eyes. This is where to look for the personality in a person’s face. He works with shapes and values, which are more important than color. But, since he makes and sells his own line of pastels, he does claim to be a “pastel pimp... you need all those colors,” he says with a wry grin. Terry usually arranges his pastels by value and thinks there are 349 colors in his complete set, but recently added 14 sunset colors, so it can change from day to day. When starting today’s portrait, he drew an oval shape using a small piece of conte, not charcoal, which darkens and muddies the piece. Sometimes he uses a stick to line up the angles from the model to the paper, eyeballing it with his thumb to measure from the top of the head to chin, then translating this to the paper. He also uses the side of the pastel as a straight edge to measure small features on the painting. He tries to simplify as much as possible and looks for the darkest dark and the lightest light on the face and gets those established first. He began the demo by roughing in a swatch of peach/orange. There are several ways to blend, either with water, rubbing alcohol, or turpenoid on Wallis paper. But using the foam pipe insulation blender prevents the paper from buckling, as it will with a wet blending.

Terry says that the more you paint from life, or en plein air, the better. He also uses a “reducing glass” during the process, to look at things smaller, rather than stepping back. It also allows you to look at your art from a new perspective and tightens things up. They are available through art suppliers, such as Jerry’s Artarama. If you do step back from your painting, look around the room at something else first, then glance at your painting with “fresh eyes”.

As the demo proceeded, Terry first blocked in Wanda’s face, skin and hair, then worked on her eyes and mouth. After blocking in facial features and hair, he spent a long time working on the eyes and mouth. He finished by blocking in the bright orange shirt, and a light aqua background behind her head. He took his foam blending tool and softened the edges of her hair by blending it. Terry is comfortable painting landscapes as well as portraits. We all enjoyed his successful one-hour portrait of Wanda. Terry’s Pastels are locally available at Artisan’s Art Supplies or through mail order from Terry.

August Program

Review by Gail Murray

Critique Session

Artists Barbara Clark, Bob Blagg, Tracy Beeler-Morganti, Joanne McDevitt, Pamela Harris, Jill Rushton, Jane Chandler, Cecelia McRoberts, Sharon Jensen, Dianna Radford, Margie Lucena, Bill Katakis, Marilyn Drake, Betty Temple, Karen Servatt, Mary Ann Hill, Carol Hall, Maryann McGraw, Erika Kane, Teri Gall, Janet Rontz, Holly Rice, Monika ten Bruggencate and Seung Youn checked their egos at the door and were willing to expose their efforts for constructive criticism — known in the art world as The Critique. They all brought one or two paintings for our own Maggie Price and Bud Edmondson to give a two minute critique. Bill Canright, Maggie's husband, lent his talent as “mule” for the program, as he adroitly placed paintings on the two easels for viewing.

Bud has spent his career as an artist, commercial illustrator, instructor and is accomplished in both pastels and watercolors. Bud spent a few minutes discussing what he considers the most important guidelines to look for in a painting when doing a critique, no matter the media.

1. Good idea or good concept. If the idea doesn't grab the viewer, then rethink what it is you want to paint or say with your painting.
2. Composition and relationships in size and color
3. Drawing skill
4. Value — lights and darks
5. Color
6. Technical skill

Maggie, artist, instructor and cofounder of “The Pastel Journal” magazine agreed with Bud, but in a slightly different order:

1. Design and composition
2. Value structure
3. Drawing skill
4. Color
5. Technique and application of pastel

She didn't make a distinction about subject matter.

The paintings everybody brought in ran the gamut of subject matter: landscapes, waterscapes, figure/portrait, animal, still-life, plant life, architectural, even a septic field. Paintings were from plein air, life, and studio work.

Without dwelling on specific comments Bud and Maggie made about each painting, as that would be tedious to read, suffice it to say, everybody enjoyed the program. They provided some good feedback in specific areas when the artists had questions or problems. The majority of the comments seemed to focus on value and the need for more contrast and more darks in paintings. There is plenty of color in pastels, which sometimes gets in the way of good values and contrast. A few times, Bud suggested the “scissor critique” and showed where cropping a painting improved it, by placing some paper over areas that could be cropped for a tighter composition.

A couple of memorable quotes came when Maggie was looking at a large tree which dominated the painting. Noting the need for more “sky holes” she told us of the time Leona Turner told a student, “If a bird flew into that tree he would break his beak and die.” It is also ok to move mountains to improve composition. Maggie quoted Edgar Payne who said, “ you don't have to paint things as stupid as you find them.”

So, remember these things when painting: horizon perspectives (low horizon or high horizon); atmospheric perspective; light sources; skies go dark to light from the top to the horizon, as well as from side to side; no halos around heads unless you are painting an angel; foreground, mid-ground, background; center of interest is usually in the mid-ground; no lollypop trees; and don't do dog paintings for Bud! All agreed that this was a very productive and useful program, that we would like to do again next year. Thank you Maggie and Bud for giving your insights.

Friday Tips for Artists

Paul Dorrell, author of the renowned guidebook for artists, Living the Artist's Life, is now writing a free column for artists every Friday. It can be found by going to Paul's website (www.pauldorrell.com) and clicking on Blog, at the top of the page. Anyone can subscribe.

Similar to Paul's columns in magazines such as Absolute Arts and The Artist's Magazine, Friday Tips addresses issues that all artists grapple with. It also touches on subjects similar to what Paul discusses in his seminars. As usual, this is done with candor.

Now that his book tour of 60 cities is finished, he's back running his gallery, overseeing major projects for clients such as H&R Block, and helping artists advance their careers.

Paul's talks were a big hit at venues such as the Art Students League of NY, the Rhode Island School of Design, and dozens of bookstores around the country. His NPR interviews were especially well received.

We hope you'll view his column, and share this information with other artists. Please don't worry about email addresses being shared. Privacy is strictly guarded.

Paul's book is available from Amazon, all Independent Bookstores, Barnes & Noble, and Borders.

New Artist Show

What had formerly been called the Emerging Artist Show was held at the Arts Alliance Gallery from July 28 to August 21.

Steve Reyes coordinated the event, with assistance from Sandra Abruzzo and Peggy Orbon.

The opening night reception was very well attended and quite a few paintings were sold during the time the show was open.

Here are just a few of the 23 candid shots of the show taken by Hank Schuyler. Hank has burned all his photos to a CD, which will be available from the PSNM library, should you wish to see additional pictures.
